When bullet trains first made their appearance, they were not as quiet as they are today. The trains emitted a rather high level of noise pollution when they pass through a tunnel. This happens because air pressure builds up and when the nose of the train emerges from the tunnel, a resounding thunderclap can be heard.

Mr Eiji Nakatsu, an engineer with the Japanese rail company JR-West, was tasked to settle this problem. The Kingfisher, a bird that creates barely a ripple when it darts into the water to hunt for fish, provided the sudden timely idea in seeking the solution. The result was a redesigned 50-metre long train nose. This helped to solve the noise problem.

Stories about Singapore

Part Three - A story about life after World War Two

A Life in Ten Cents

by Quek Si Min

Illustrated by Low Kowling

Did you know that in the past, people could live on ten cents a day?

There was always something to see or do in the kampung!

Inspired by the childhood of the writer's grandfather.

Text 2

The extract below is taken from an article.

Book Review

A Life in Ten Cents portrays the childhood of Beng Chong in a kampung or village after World War Two. The book takes readers back to the good old days when children climb trees, play with marbles and swim in the river. Vivid descriptions of the villagers coming together to celebrate one another's festivals makes the book delightful to read.

It is amusing how Beng Chong is given ten cents every day but his friends consider him rich. Some of them receive as little as five cents, or nothing at all! Readers will be entertained by how Beng Chong makes decisions every day on how to spend his precious ten cents. He can choose to buy a toy or share his pocket money with his friends.

Step into Beng Chong's shoes and read about how this cheeky boy not only sets off firecrackers and frightens his neighbours but also flies kites with them. This heartwarming story will make you laugh at the children's antics and tug at your heartstrings with stories of kampung spirit among neighbours.

For each question from 21 to 25, shade your answer (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet.

21 According to the book cover in Text 1, which of the following is true of the book?
The book _____.

- (1) is written by Low Kowling
- (2) features only one character
- (3) describes life in Singapore after World War Two
- (4) is the first book in the series Stories about Singapore ()

22 "Did you know that in the past, people could live on ten cents a day?" Why did the writer ask the question in Text 1?

- (1) to make people reflect on the question
- (2) to inform people what the story is about
- (3) to draw people to want to read the book
- (4) to get people to think of various situations ()

23 Based on the book cover in Text 1, which of the following best fits the book you expect to read?

- (1) Thriller
- (2) Mystery
- (3) Recount
- (4) Adventure ()

24 "There was always something to see or do in the kampung!" The image in Text 1 supports this description by showing that the kampung is _____.

- (1) lively
- (2) quiet
- (3) crowded
- (4) secluded ()

25 The way Text 1 portrays how people live in harmony with their neighbours is accurate because Text 2 says _____.

- (1) children climb trees
- (2) villagers ... celebrate one another's festivals
- (3) this cheeky boy sets off firecrackers and frightens his neighbours
- (4) Beng Chong makes decisions ... on how to spend his precious ten cents ()

A miserable merchant who wanted to be happy once again sent his son, Antov, to learn the secret of happiness from the wisest of men.

Determined, Antov went to great lengths in order to find the wise man's home. He crossed rivers and wandered through the forest for forty days until he reached a stunning castle at the top of a mountain. As he gazed up at the castle, he instinctively knew he had reached his destination. 5

Antov entered the castle and walked into a majestic dining hall. There, he was greeted by an orchestra playing sweet melodies and a table laden with the most delectable dishes prepared by the castle's chefs. As the wise man was busy talking to a few people, Antov had to wait for a few minutes. As Antov waited, the minutes seemed like hours. Finally, it was Antov's turn. With patience, the wise man listened attentively to Antov as he explained why he had come. However, after hearing him out, the wise man told Antov that he did not have the time to explain to him the secret of happiness at that very moment. He suggested that Antov take a stroll around his castle and return in two hours' time. "I want to ask you for a favour," he added, handing Antov a teaspoon, in which he had poured a drop of oil. "While you are walking, carry this spoon and don't let the oil spill." 10 15

Antov began to climb up and down the castle staircases, always keeping his eyes on the spoon as he did not want to let the wise man down. At the end of two hours, he returned to the wise man. "So did you see the Persian tapestries hanging in my dining room? Did you see the garden that the Master of Gardeners took ten years to create? Did you notice the beautiful art work in my library?" asked the wise man. Embarrassed, Antov confessed he had seen nothing. "Go back and see the wonders of my world," said the wise man, "You can't trust a man if you don't know his house." 20

Now more at ease, Antov took the spoon and strolled again through the castle, this time paying attention to all the works of art. He saw the exquisite gardens, the magnificent mountains all around the castle and the splendour of the flowers. 25

Returning to the wise man, Antov reported in detail all that he had seen. After a slight pause, the wise man asked, "Where is the drop of oil that I entrusted you with?" Looking down at the spoon, Antov realised that he had spilled every bit of it.

"Well, that's the only advice I have to give you," the wise man said. "The secret of happiness lies in relishing all the wonders of the world while never forgetting the drop of oil in the spoon." 30

"I still don't understand, Sir! Please tell me what the drop of oil signifies!" Antov cried out, his lips quivering in anxiety.

After listening closely, Antov headed home. He could not wait to share this invaluable knowledge with his father. His father not only needed to enjoy the wonders of the world, he also had to be grateful for what he already had. Having no gratitude made his father an unhappy man. Antov immediately knew what he had to do to bring happiness into his father's life. 35
