Time-Travel Trails

Book Three - Pedal into the past

Cycling Through History

by Kelvin Ho | Illustrated by Siti Farah

Every street has a story. Every turn reveals a clue.

A school cycling trip becomes an adventure when Joel finds an old photograph that leads his team through historic neighbourhoods.

Features a heritage route map

Book Review

Cycling Through History follows Joel and three classmates on a heritage trail. Their teacher gives each group a photograph and challenges them to locate the place where it was taken many years ago.

The book combines a fast-moving search with facts about traditional shops, bridges and public housing. The route map is clear, and the captions beneath the illustrations explain how each location has changed.

The characters do not always agree, but they learn to divide tasks and listen to one another. By the end, readers understand that history is not limited to museums; it can be discovered in familiar streets.

Section I: Comprehension Open-ended(20 marks)

Read the passage and answer questions 66 to 75.

Leena was the class monitor, but she often believed that giving orders was the same as leading. When a new pupil worked slowly, she became impatient and completed his tasks without asking. Her father decided to send her to Mr Aziz, who managed a community kitchen, to learn what made a team strong.

- 5 Leena arrived confidently and explained why she was there. Mr Aziz pointed to a long table with one empty seat and asked her to organise lunch for twelve volunteers. Leena immediately began moving plates and telling everyone what to do.

She refused suggestions because she wanted the meal served quickly. She asked two people to carry heavy pots while others stood idle. She also forgot cups and left the empty seat at the end of the table unused. When lunch began, several volunteers were still waiting for food.

- 10 Leena felt embarrassed by the confusion. Mr Aziz did not scold her. Instead, he asked whether she had discovered what each volunteer could do well. Leena admitted that she had been too busy giving instructions to listen.

The next day, Mr Aziz asked her to organise lunch again. This time, Leena invited suggestions before assigning tasks. One volunteer prepared drinks, another arranged plates and a third checked that everyone had enough food.

Leena kept the empty seat for a volunteer who was arriving late. When he finally came, a complete meal was waiting for him. The work finished smoothly, and the volunteers thanked Leena for including everyone.

- 15 Mr Aziz explained that the empty seat was a reminder to make room for people, ideas and unexpected needs. A strong leader did not simply speak the loudest; a strong leader helped every member contribute.

Leena returned to school with a different attitude. She asked the new pupil which tasks he preferred and gave him time to complete them. Soon, she noticed that he was excellent at checking details that others had missed.

66 Why did Leena's father send her to Mr Aziz?
